

Your INL Update — Week of Nov. 29, 2010

This is Nicole Stricker with your INL Update.

Idaho National Laboratory is helping eastern Idaho celebrate diversity by sponsoring Friday's annual Breaking Boundaries black-tie gala. The annual fundraiser helps raise awareness of diversity and supports those who are underserved, including organizations that care for eastern Idahoans living with HIV and AIDS. INL employees and managers will be among the hundreds of community members supporting the event.

Cleaning up the INL Site and transforming the lab into a premier research institution is no small task. Five years into the process, the manager of the Department of Energy's Idaho Operations Office lauded progress in a recent Post Register opinion piece. You can read it in the Nov. 24 edition or on the newspaper's website.

You can get a glimpse into the life and work of INL employee Keith Powers, who coordinates work schedules for 14 nuclear research facilities. Powers compares his work as production coordination manager at INL's Materials and Fuels Complex to running a three-ring circus. You can read more in a new feature on INL's home page.
